Farmers Must Be DESTROYED

Says Franklin

WASHINGTON—That it is the ultimate intention of the master-minds of the CIO-New Deal party to eventually sovietize agriculture is evidenced in the writings of Jay Franklin, a CIO-New Deal horn blower and considered mouth-piece. Franklin's attitude to the land owner and farmer is much the same as that held by the Communists of Russia following the overthrow of the Czar, if what he has to say in his book "For What We Are About to Receive" is to be seriously considered. Read what this New Dealer has to say:

"The farmer has arrogated to himself all virtue and all knowledge. He has voted against progress, and civilization, against the city, against science, against art. He has made and unmade Presidents in the image of Main street. He has exhausted our soils, as he has exhausted our Treasury, if given half a chance. He is the great obstacle to human progress, the great threat to political stability. Sooner or later we shall discover, as the Roman Church discovered, as England discovered, as Soviet Russia discovered, that the pagan, the landed proprietor, the Kulak, is simply so much mud on the paths of progress and must be swept aside if society is to advance.

"These are harsh words, but they are justified. The American farmer as a political institution is a danger to our civilization.

"Some day, some leader of some party will be compelled to rouse the people against the farmer and crush him as an obstacle to the national welfare, as he has been crushed in every nation and age which has experienced his predominance. The fact that it is good politics now to help the farmer is going to make it better politics in the future to injure him.

It is a shame that he cannot be changed by less drastic methods, but he has taken to politics, and the problem of farm relief will become not 'how shall we relieve the farmer,' but 'who shall relieve us of the farmer?'"

"When tillage begins, other arts follow. The farmer, therefore, is the founder of civilization."

All society depends on the farmer

QUITE TRUE

A pretty strong case can be made out for universal military training. People can understand that. They know what military training is. But this idea of civilian training—having the federal government take over for one year the whole education of American youth—smells like the Nazi system which Hitler inaugurated in Germany. Education is properly a matter for the various states to handle. While it is in charge of school districts, as now, the children get the kind of education their parents want them to have. And that is the way it should be. The federal government, which thus far has failed to demonstrate it is either competent to or capable of handling its own affairs efficiently and economically, certainly has no license to try to take over all education.
