Ramona, Okla., March 7, 1946.

Editor Tulsa World, Tulsa, Okla., Dear Sir:

I read with interest and concern your editorial in this morning's paper on Mr. Churchill's speach at Fulton Mo.. The contradictory trend and statements in the heading and forepart of this editorial as compared with the last paragraph were especially noticeable.

I do not consider that we owe Mr. Churchill or the British Empire one single thing; a gift, a compliment, loan, grant or other favor. Consequently I cannot conceive of any justification or cause for this country to go into any alliance with this dependent nation.

It was indeed surprising to me that you would indulge in such remarks as made in the forpart of this editorial, knowing full-well that Power Politics had a great deal todo with the War just concluded and other wars in the past. Such articles and agitation will in my opinion tend to bring us nearer the brink of another war.

Your paper has within its grasp the possibility of doing the citizens of this State and of man-kind in general a great favor by throwing its full weight behind a United Nations Organization with power to enact laws and force to enforce its edicts and decisions. Such an organization is ably outlined and fully discussed in Mr. Arthur Reeves' book, The Anatomy of Peace. This book has the endorsement of Justice Owen Roberts of the Supreme Court, Senator Fullbright, Ark. and other prominent citizens and has been briefed in the December and January issues of the Reader's Digest.

Sincerety Jours. Gramme.
