Rep. George Schwabe
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

Dear Representative Schwabe:

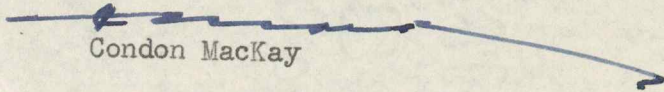

I hope the House of Representatives will take hold of the British loan matter and completely knock it out.

By this time surely we should know that our own situation is so serious that we cannot try to help all the rest of the world when actually we don't have enough money to put our own house in order.

The futility of buying friendship should certainly be evident. The whole thing is one of the tragic errors coming from mis-directed good will. Actually the world would be better to let natural courses take place than try to bail out the weak economy which England has. For the last twenty-five years we have been pampering England and have already contributed enough to weaken the enterprise and self-reliance of the English nation.

The American people just can't stand these added burdens any longer.

Faithfully yours,

Condon MacKay
